Webinar 1: Conflict-Related Sexual Violence Against Women in Tigray

Overview

The scale and brutality of crimes of Conflict-Related Sexual Violence against Women committed in Tigray have drawn widespread condemnation from around the world. While Tigray has been entirely closed off from communications for three months, and large parts remain closed off, large numbers of sexual violence have been reported.

UNFPA estimated in April that 22.500 women would require support as a consequence of ConflictRelated Sexual Violence. There is massive underreporting of sexual violence. Large parts of Tigray are closed off. Journalists and aid workers cannot reach all areas. The shame and fear associated with the violence and perpetrators acting with impunity and the destruction of local administration and hospitals compound the problem of underreporting. What is being reported is the tip of the iceberg. The webinar on Conflict-Related Sexual Violence Against Women in Tigray highlighted these issues.

Overview

Tigray is a region endowed with immense religious and cultural heritages that are footprints of millennia's history, which extends back to 4000 BCE. Hence Tigray is a foundation for hundreds of thousands of written artifacts (inscriptions and manuscripts).

Aksum Tsion is a symbol (in Tigray) for the first introduction of Christianity into Sub-Saharan Africa. AlNejash Mosque (in Tigray) is a symbol for the first introduction of Islam into Africa. Tigray is home to the first Christian and Moslem diaspora in history. By estimation, hundreds of religious places and monasteries (with their heritages) are damaged and/or their tradition vandalized.

According to the Təgray Orthodox Church diocese report at the beginning of February, 326 members of the church priests were among the countless civilians randomly and callously killed. This webinar exposed the Brutalities against Religious Leaders, Holy Places, and Heritage in Tigray.

Overview

Present-day Eritrea is one of the most militarized countries in the world. Conscription into the National Service is through - the educational system, regular razzias (round-ups), and everyone caught trying to flee the country. Those who do not participate in the National Service are denied the rights and benefits of citizenship. Conscripts are at the mercy of their superiors, who exercise control and command over them without restriction or accountability.

According to UN Commission, the National Service constitutes a crime against humanity. Minors are also subjected to enforced conscription into the National Service. The National Service is the reason Eritreans flee their country, and the UN estimates that 5,000 people flee Eritreans every month.

The National Service has been deployed in the war in Tigray. The majority of Refugees under international protection in Tigray have fled National Service conditions in Tigray. It was reported that up to 20,000 refugees have disappeared, and forcefully returned to Eritrea under duress. In this webinar, we highlighted the crimes committed against these refugees.

Webinar 4: Eritrean Involvement in the War in Tigray

Overview

Since the start of the conflict in Tigray, Eritrea has been accused of being involved in the conflict. It took five months for Eritrea and Ethiopia to acknowledge the Eritrean presence in Tigray. When they did, they declared that Eritrean troops would be withdrawing immediately. It has been three months since that declaration, and the continued presence of Eritrean troops in Tigray is well documented.

Since the start of the conflict, Eritrean troops have been accused of committing atrocities, War Crimes, and Crimes against Humanity. These human rights violations are built on the system of repression that already exists in Eritrea. This heavy repression has given them the unfavourable nickname of the "North Korea of Africa"

Ever since their independence in 1991, Eritrea has considered the TPLF as one of their major rivals in the Horn. However after the TPLF was removed from power, the TPLF leadership retreated into Tigray. The conflict in Tigray has provided Eritrea with an attempt to get rid of its historic rivals and to attempt to further reinforce its position in the region. This webinar provided an evidence against Eritreans participation in the Tigray War.

Webinar 5: Hunger For Peace, Hunger For Justice

🛉 🛉 97 Participants

Overview

Truth is an indispensable element of any pathway to justice and to peace. The search for truth in Tigray was hampered by a complete communication shut down in the first three months of the conflict. This created a situation of impunity against atrocious crimes.

EEPA consider what civilian people in Tigray have testified when they were able to do so, and have rigorously verified the testimonies. What we presented early on in the Situation Reports has been systematically denied by the perpetrators, but as time went by, each of those stories appeared to be true.

In this webinar, we discussed how

- How the war began
- The destruction of health facilities on a systematic scale
- The systematic destruction of livelihoods
- The attack with chemical weapons on civilians

While EEPA is confident of the sources and the checks implemented to verify the information, independent investigations remain absolutely necessary to establish the veracity of all of information and testimonies.

Videos and PowerPoint Presentation

- Destruction of Livelihoods
- Destruction of Health Facilities
- The attack with Chemical Weapons
- The start of the War
- Powerpoint reviewing the key issues

Today there should be one clear message, that the international community must come together to condemn these atrocities, but that more importantly – they must act.

Governments and institutions have always been cautious to use certain terms: genocide and rape as a weapon of war. But we mustn't be afraid to use these terms if they accurately describe what is taking place.

Assita Kanko - Member of European Parliament
